According to Techland, the customization elements in Dying Light: The Following represent the largest technological leap from the first game. Similar to its predecessor, Dying Light: The Following features two main modes, The Following and Freeroam. The former mode involves following a protagonist through a variety of survival-horror scenarios, while the latter allows players to roam free and unlock new areas, where they can customize the buggy with special gear. The game also features a PvP mode called the Toxicity Protocol, which offers players a set of combat challenges and challenges which reward various unlockables. According to lead level designer Maciej Gendowski, there is no life meter in Dying Light: The Following. Dying Light: The Following takes place in the fictional American city of Harran. At the beginning of the game, protagonist Kyle Crane wakes up to find himself trapped in a warehouse with the bodies of his friends still lying around. He stumbles out of the warehouse after a group of survivors. The protagonist later sees blood pouring out of a container. He finds three dead bodies with their faces partially eaten. He also finds a backpack containing the following message: Upon wandering around the abandoned streets of Harran, he meets a woman named Carla. They later go to an abandoned hospital, where Carla is attacked by a group of zombies. After he saves her, she contacts a group called Task Force 141 and informs them of the situation. Carla and the protagonist leave the hospital to meet with the Task Force, where they are ambushed by a second group of zombies. After escaping from the ambush, the protagonist stumbles upon a secret laboratory, where he is told by a technician that the government is killing people by injecting them with a special drug. Before the protagonist can be captured, Carla and a man named Ben arrive at the laboratory. The protagonist is rescued and taken to Task Force 141 headquarters. At the headquarters, the protagonist finds out that Carla has an implant on her wrist that contains information about Task Force 141's plans for Harran. The implant's battery begins to run out. Carla gets another implant to help keep her alive. The Task Force sends the protagonist to a secret cabin in the mountains to find a way to stop the government's operation. While exploring the cabin, the protagonist finds a device known as the Shadow Generator. Once the device is activated, a group of shadows (replicas of people made out of shadows) attacks the protagonist and he has to fight them 82157476af
