DVD GPS For Nissan 2008 2009 2010 Infiniti 2011 2012 2013 2014 2015 2016. We offer great deals on our GPS installation, if you buy through us, we can ship it to you. After a month of preparation, the driver, the passenger and the mechanics all gathered at the local Nissan dealer in the Northeast to put the final touches on our new 2012 Nissan X-Terra. As a promotion, we also thought we would check out the 2012 Nissan Murano. After some minor updates to the new Murano, it was time to head home. As we headed home on our long journey back to the south, I decided to take a few photos of the navigation panel on the Murano's instrument panel. I wanted to make sure the navigation panel was still in place when we were done installing the new navigation system. I believe I made an important discovery. The Instrument Panel is essentially a Frankenstein of parts and pieces of different manufacturers parts. I did a quick search and found that the navigation instrument panel was built by "Chrysler", not "Nissan". As I checked on the internet, I found that all Nissan and Infiniti cars from the past 6 years have the same instrument panel. I wondered why Nissan would build an identical instrument panel for their own cars. I think they were making a point to show a different look and feel than the rest of the car. That is an amazing image to me, a Nissan steering wheel with a Chrysler instrument panel. An additional reason for the instrument panel having a different feel is the same reason they started with the 7" LCD screen. When I worked for a large retail store, we offered customer's an "in-store price" on a product. The customer would bring their paper price tag in and see how much they could get away with paying. These customers paid sticker price, no questions asked. Most customers knew this was their opportunity to "shop around". We were concerned they would walk out of our store with the lower priced instrument panel. To combat this, we had an in store price that was exactly 1 penny lower than what was on the price tag. That way, we would still be able to charge the same price. If the customer called us up to complain, we would say, "that's the price you 82157476af
